Brief Description of Event: For students interested in becoming civil servants, appearing for various competitive examinations, and/or curious about the prospects in the civil services, this orientation programme provided them with the space and opportunity to interact with senior bureaucrats. Mr Kaushik Saha from the Indian Administrative Service, the Secretary, School Education Department, Government of West Bengal, and Shri S. Venkatramani, from the Indian Revenue Service, Retired Commissioner of Income Taxes, patiently guided the students on preparation, syllabus, balancing their graduation and other interests in their respective lectures. The highly interactive session saw students from all streams ask questions about their administrative experiences and gain critical insights into life as bureaucrats.

Outcome: Students across the streams expressed interest in such orientation sessions, as many opt to prepare for the civil services after graduation. Guidance, such as that from seasoned bureaucrats, helped them make these professional decisions. Additionally, for students of political science, whose syllabi include public administration and policy-making, insights from civil servants helped align their theoretical knowledge with practical experience.
