Brief Description of the Event:

Handholding is an annual exercise of the department of Political Science, where by professionally distinguished alumnae are invited to share their insights and career trajectories with the current students, with a notable focus on the outgoing batches. The aim of the programme is to provide a semi-formal platform whereby the experiences of the alumnae expand the horizons in terms of post-college career options, internship opportunities and other professional tracks after the disciplinary training in college. Additionally, Handholding institutionalises the department's efforts of alumni outreach as required by current evaluation metrics.

In this edition, Ms. Priya Tiwari of the 2014-2017 batch, who presently leads the Customer Trust External Relationship for APAC region at Amazon Inc. addressed the students of the department. Her presentation succinctly outlined the requirements of the industry, degree/internships to follow after college and skills to focus on to embark on a corporate career after a degree in political science.

Outcome: The presentation was followed by an interactive session, where students directly gained insights from the speaker. This event allowed students to know various options to follow, going beyond the conventional tracks. Finally, it aided the department in its alumni outreach, allowing for benefitting its current students and strengthening its bonds with the former students.
